Chronic Sinusitis Mold Evaluation Results for:

Based on the answers in your evaluation the confidence level that your Chronic Sinusitis may caused by mold and mold sensitivity is:

This evaluation is only intended to start you on a path to better understand if mold might be the cause of your Chronic Sinusitis. The question is used in conjunction with several other tests by Dr. Donald Dennis to establish a direct connection to mold presence and mold sensitivity of his patients. The good news is, if you are in the "Somewhat Likely", "Very Likely" or "Almost Certain" confidence range there are immediate steps that you can take to further understand if MOLD is the cause. Phase 1 Get Mold Out Of Your Body Many people report feeling better within days of starting Phase 1 due to the decrease in mold and mycotoxin presence in the body. This reverses the trend and allows critical immune system resources to act more effectively. Rinse your sinuses daily Daily rinsing is the most effective way to remove mold and mycotoxins from your sinuses to allow your body to start the healing process. View Product Protect your sinuses on the go Use CitriDrops Nasal Spray when you are not able to rinse/want continuous protection from ongoing mold spore exposure through the day. View Product Purge mold from the rest of the body When taken orally, CitriDrops Dietary Supplement aids the immune system by helping to manage fungus and bacteria in the mouth, throat, and digestive tract. View Product Create a safe breathing space Burning EC3 Air Purification Candles keeps mold counts down in the air around you to levels that will not negatively impact your health. View Product Phase 2 Remove Mold From Your Environment Next, it is time to identify and mitigate the source(s) of mold living in your environment and attacking your immune system. Mitigation of all mold sources is critically important to getting better and staying better. Test your home, car, and office for mold Use mold testing plates to identify the locations/sources of mold in your environment.
